

It's not every day that plastic laminate lands on the front page. But Interior Arts isn't your everyday laminate.

In case you missed it, Interior Arts #2005 Cracked Cement made the front page of the February 13th print edition of The New York Times. The laminates are part of an existing set at NY Fashion Week.

If you're familiar with InteriorArts, you're probably seen with this massive set design, since this will be the third Fashion Week (last fall and last winter being the previous two) that featured this "Pavillion" set for fashion brands.

We think it's pretty unusual for a plastic laminate to be featured so prominently on the NYT's front page. But Interior Arts isn't an ordinary laminate. It's a curated collection of hpl laminates, with an emphasis on unique designs and impressive texture. And it's from the same people who bring you Chemetal and Treefrog Veneer. 4' x 8' sheets. 78 designs. GreenGuard-certified.

InteriorArts®

hpl design laminates | ialaminates.com | 800 807-7341

CHEMETAL

treefrog

InteriorArts